

“Interventions”

“Irresponsible People, Conspiracy Theorists, the Coronavirus, Medieval Thinking, and Laws”

Apart from taking measures regarding the faction of irresponsible people who urge parents on Facebook not to allow students to wear masks, the prosecution of cybercrime [proposed, but not yet implemented, by the government in Greece—Trans.] should have begun to curtail the falsehoods spread by conspiracy theorists on the Internet who go so far as to deny the very existence of the coronavirus.

At issue here is the promotion of medieval ideas that seek to do away with the scientific knowledge that has been acquired over the passage of centuries.

These are the same people who refuse to vaccinate their children, thereby exposing them to the danger of illnesses which ought to have disappeared.

The problem is that they do not simply place themselves at risk, but create a perilous situation for society as a whole.

It is for the protection of society that there exist laws, which should be strictly implemented.

Article republished from another source by † Metropolitan Cyprian of Oropos and Phyle

August 16, 2020 (Old Style)

† Commemoration of the Translation of the Icon not made by hands, also called the Mandelion, of our Lord, God, and Savior, Jesus Christ, from Edessa to Constantinople

